FIFA 20 introduces a "Dynamic Physics Engine," which results in more realistic movements, responsive ball control and a more satisfying experience in FIFA 20. This engine is used to simulate players' actions in the match, including the player's impact on the ball, tackling, running, passing, dribbling, and shooting. The moves of the players are similar to those of the real players, and the size of the player is an accurate measurement of the player's strength and how far a player can pass the ball. Many of the actions performed in the game are realistic, and it is possible to dodge difficult moving players, such as those diving or jumping into tackles, as in real life. FIFA 20 also introduces the "GK Dynamic Response," which reacts to the movement and positioning of the goalkeeper during the course of the match. The goalkeeper's save system is also adapted from the real life model, and the keeper even has the ability to use the slip and slide control during the course of the match. FIFA 20 introduces a new "Player Development" system and new structure, to help players further pursue their career as footballers. Players can now decide on their preferred positions, such as midfielder or forward, and then focus on their strength, skills and attributes to be more effective in the game. The "Playmaker" attribute allows players to influence the match with creativity, dribbling and passing in the way that they choose. Players can now enhance their attributes in a new "Personal Development" system, which enables players to upgrade attributes between real-life training sessions. Players can improve their attributes in the "Progression" mode, upgrade their attributes in the "Slot" mode, or enhance them in the "Daily Practice" mode, and the further development of their
